At The Corner Of The Campus

Michael Duffett, Tutorial Services Coordinator

For those of you who are not yet regulars at the Center, I need to let you know that we have moved. From A2 in the middle of the West Campus, we have moved to A5, at the farthest corner of the West Campus.

There are a number of benefits to our new location, described by one ex-corporate faculty wag as "the corner office of executive preference," not least of which is that we have two rooms now. This means that if two tutorials are in session, they can be held entirely independently, and Accounting majors will not be beleaguered by chat of gerunds, participles and dangling verbal phrases, and those there to wrestle with these grammatical demons will not have their brains fuddled by LIFO, FIFO and spreadsheets!

We have a great view across the greensward in front of the new office, and I have installed a coffee maker on the premises to eliminate the long walk to other offices from which I formerly purloined. Come and visit and enjoy the view and the coffee aroma!

Consistency In Declaring Your Major

Lance Hall, Registrar

If you are pursuing a major other than the one you originally declared, you may be misclassified. For example, you began studying Accounting, and have since changed your mind and are now studying Community Affairs. Even though you list community affairs as your major on your registration form every quarter, the College may still consider you an accounting major. What's the big deal, you ask? If and when you apply for financial aid, an evaluation is performed based on your declared major. You run the risk of receiving financial aid funds based on a (potentially) incorrect major. This may or may not affect the amount of funds you receive.

How to correct this problem? Come into the Registrar's Office and complete a Change of Records form, listing your new major. This form is also used whenever you change your name, address, or phone number.

What Are They Watching Now?

What kinds of images fill their minds? Here a list of movies that faculty have watched in recent weeks.
